

The 5-Day Calm & Sleep Reset

A gentle, lifestyle-led wind-down for busy people who can't switch off at night.

If you fall into bed wired, scroll until late, or wake up at 3am with your mind racing — this short reset is for you.

Over the next five days, you'll layer five simple evening habits that tell your body and brain it's safe to slow down. No app. No tracker. No pressure to be perfect.

How to use this guide

One small action per day, for five days. No overhaul, no perfection — just a gentle reset you can actually keep up with.

Day 1 — Anchor your wake-up time

Your body clock takes its biggest cue from when you wake — not when you go to bed. Anchoring this is the fastest way to rebuild a steady rhythm.

Try today:

- Pick one wake-up time you can keep for the next 5 days (yes, including weekends).
- Open a window or step outside within 15 minutes of waking — daylight on your eyes for 2–5 minutes.
- Delay your first phone scroll by at least 10 minutes.

Tip: morning light is the on-switch for tonight's sleepiness.

Day 2 — Cap caffeine before 2pm

Caffeine has a long tail. Even an afternoon coffee can quietly block the deep, restorative part of your sleep — without you noticing it at the time.

Try today:

- Make 2pm your soft cut-off for coffee, energy drinks, and strong tea.
- Swap any later cup for water, rooibos, or herbal tea.
- Notice how you feel between 9pm and 11pm tonight versus yesterday.

Day 3 — Build a 30-minute wind-down

You can't go from full speed to deep sleep in 90 seconds. A short, repeatable wind-down trains your nervous system to shift gears.

Try today:

- Choose a fixed wind-down start time tonight (e.g. 9:30pm).
- Pick three calming actions: dim lights, shower, journal, stretch, read, breathe.
- Do them in the same order each night — repetition is the magic.

Boring is the goal. Boring = predictable = sleepy.

Day 4 — Park the mental noise

3am wake-ups are usually unfinished thinking. Giving your brain a place to drop tomorrow's load earlier in the evening stops it from waking you up to do it.

Try today:

- Spend 5 minutes writing tomorrow's top 3 priorities — on paper, not on your phone.
- Write one line: "What I'm letting go of for tonight is..."
- Try 4-7-8 breathing in bed: inhale 4s, hold 7s, exhale 8s × 4 rounds.

Day 5 — Protect the last hour

The last 60 minutes set the tone for everything. Tonight, you're going to defend it like a meeting.

Try today:

- No work email or work chat in the last hour before bed.
- Lower the lights — overhead off, lamps on. Cooler is sleepier.
- Phone out of arm's reach. If you use it as an alarm, switch to a real one if you can.

If you only ever do one of these five days again, make it this one.

After your 5 days

If even two of these five habits stuck, you've already changed the direction of your sleep. Don't try to do all five forever — pick the one that helped most and keep it.

Sleep is a practice, not a switch. Be patient with yourself.
